

FUNERARY PRACTICES IN SERBIA

Funerary International Series

Series Editor: Julie Rugg, University of York, UK

The study of mortality is now an established academic endeavour which is rapidly expanding in scale and in disciplinary reach. One missing element is a repository of basic facts about funerary practice in each country and the broader legal, governance and denominational frameworks for those practices which might serve to set more detailed research in context.

This book series remedies this absence by producing country-specific monographs, with texts providing a standard framework of questions, which ensures even coverage; aids international comparison; fosters international linkages across the academic community; and inspires new research directions. These texts will be a valuable resource for researchers across the humanities and social sciences concerned with death and funerary customs.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Assistance in gathering materials for this book was provided by the employees of the Public Utilities Company Funeral Services from Belgrade, Lisje from Novi Sad, City Parks from Čačak, Parks and Sanitation from Zrenjanin, Sanitation from Kraljevo, and Šumadija from Kragujevac. Photographs were obtained from the archive of the National Museum in Čačak, the National Museum in Niš, Museum “21 October” in Kragujevac, and the Museum in Prijepolje, as well as from professional photographers Željko Cajić and Saša Savović. I would like to give special thanks to my colleagues, curators Dr Violeta Obrenović, Dr Miloš Timotijević, Dr Dejan Krstić, Mr Nenad Ristović, Ljiljana Ljujić, and Aleksandar Obradović. For the purposes of this publication, maps were produced by associates at the Republic Geodetic Institute.

I would like to thank everyone for their selfless help.
