ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Some content of the book, in particular, that in Chapter 3, is developed (reprinted) from our research article: “Mainstreaming populism through the Twitter practices of politicians and the news media: A case study of the 2016 Brexit referendum debates,” published by Information Polity in 2020. The publication is available at IOS Press through DOI: 10.3233/IP-190197. The authors would like to thank IOS Press for granting us the right to include the related content in this book. The authors want to thank the two anonymous reviewers for their comments. Thanks also go to the open-source applications including Twitter4J, Elasticsearch, Kibana, Gephi and Inskape, their contributors and Python communities online. The authors would like to thank Jen McCall of Emerald Publishing for her enthusiasm and support for this book project, which is our second book about Brexit and Twitter. The first one is Tweeting the Environment #Brexit, published in 2018 by Emerald.
