

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

Margaret Alston is a professor of social work and the head of department at Monash University in Melbourne. She also leads the Gender, Leadership and Social Sustainability (GLASS) research unit at Monash. Previously, she was professor of social work and human services, and also director of the Centre for Rural Social Research at Charles Sturt University. She has published widely in the field of rural social issues and is internationally recognised for her research on gender and climate change.

Mindy Crandall is a Ph.D. student in applied economics at Oregon State University. She is in the Department of Forest Engineering, Resources, and Management. Her dissertation research is focused on the possible impacts of forest harvest for fuel reduction goals on rural markets and communities. Her previous work has focused on rural labor markets, rural poverty, and the working poor.

Rae Dufty is a lecturer in human geography at the University of Western Sydney. Her primary research focus is on the political-economic geographies of neoliberal policy approaches in both urban and rural settings. This has resulted in a wide range of research projects from the archival analysis of housing policy in Australia, to investigating the causes and actual migration pathways of Australian rural youth. She has recently published articles in the Journal of Rural Studies (2008), Geography Compass (2009) and Australian Geographer (2009).

Chris Gibson is a professorial fellow and the deputy director of the Australian Centre for Cultural Environmental Research at the University of Wollongong. His research interests and current projects focus on creative industries, cultural planning, sustainability and social justice in regions. He is the author of the forthcoming books Music Festivals and Regional Development (Ashgate 2010) and Festival Places: Revitalising Rural Australia (Channel View 2010).

Sakari Hänninen is presently working as a research professor at the National Institute for Health and Welfare (Finland). He is also a senior research fellow at the CoE Foundations of European Law and Polity (University of Helsinki). His research interests are focussed on political and legal theory, welfare politics, government of social exclusion. Recent publications include three co-edited books in social security studies. During the past two years, he has also published more than 10 articles or book chapters in international and Finnish scientific journals and publications mainly on legal and welfare politics.

Mark H. Harvey is an assistant professor of sociology at Florida Atlantic University. His research interests include the political economy of welfare, race and gender, and rural community development. He is co-author of Welfare Reform in Persistent Rural Poverty: Dreams, Disenchantments and Diversity as well as articles in Rural Sociology and a number of edited volumes.

Debra A. Henderson is an associate professor of sociology and 2008–2011 presidential teacher in the Department of Sociology & Anthropology, Ohio University. She publishes in the areas of the family, poverty and inequality, and the intersections of race, class, and gender.

Robin A. Kearns is a professor of geography at the University of Auckland. His research interests range across the geography of health services, the determinants of community wellbeing and the cultural politics of place.

Nicolas Lewis is a senior lecturer in geography at the University of Auckland. His interests include the production of subjects and spaces of governance as well as the geographies of the state associated with translating influence or control into micro setting such as educational institutions.

Tim McCreanor is a senior researcher with Te Ropu Whariki/The Whariki Research Group, Massey University. His interests and experience cover gender, culture and public health, particularly using qualitative approaches and critical discursive methods.

Paul Milbourne is a professor of human geography at Cardiff University. He has longstanding research interests in the geographies of poverty and welfare with a particular focus on rural places. Recent books include International Perspectives on Rural Homelessness (Routledge, with Paul Cloke), Rural Poverty (Routledge) and Rural Homelessness: Issues, Experiences and Policy Responses (Policy Press, with Paul Cloke and Rebekah Widdowfield).

Kathleen A. Pickering is a professor and the department chair of anthropology at Colorado State University. Her research interests focus on political economy and the effects of global systems on indigenous communities and local economies. Her publications include Lakota Culture,

World Economy, the co-authored volume, Welfare Reform in Persistent Rural Poverty: Dreams, Disenchantments and Diversity, and articles in American Anthropologist, Rural Sociology, and American Indian Culture and Research Journal.

Bill Reimer is a professor of sociology at Concordia University in Montréal. From 1997 to 2007, he directed a Canadian national research project on the New Rural Economy (<http://nre.concordia.ca>). His publications deal with community capacity-building, social support networks, social capital, social cohesion, municipal finances, the economy and the household, rural immigration, and the informal economy.

Tiina Silvasti is working as a university lecturer at the Department of Social Sciences at the University of Helsinki in Finland. Her research interests are in THE social consequences of agricultural transformation and regional differentiation in rural Finland. Recent publications include Maatilan varjossa. Rakennemuutoksen anatomiaa (In the shadow of the farm. Anatomy of the structural change, 2009). In addition, she has published eight articles or book chapters in international scientific publications, mainly on the social and cultural impacts of agricultural change.

Ann R. Tickamyer is a professor and the head of the department of agricultural economics and rural sociology at The Pennsylvania State University. She is a former president of the Rural Sociology Society, former editor of Rural Sociology, and has published extensively in the areas of rural poverty and inequality, gender, and development, and spatial inequality.

Suzie Watkin is a research associate for the Wales Institute of Economic and Social Research, Data and Methods (WISERD), based at Aberystwyth University. Her PhD research looked at welfare governance for young people in rural Wales and she has since worked on projects about grassroots rural protest and connections between rural people and the land. She has also acted as a rural housing and transport adviser for the Countryside Agency. Current research for WISERD is concerned with gaining multi-disciplinary insights into the society and economy of Wales.

Bruce Weber is a professor of agricultural and resource economics at Oregon State University and director of the OSU Rural Studies Program. From 2002 to 2005, he served as co-director of the RUPRI Rural Poverty Research Center. His current research has focused on rural poverty, hunger, and migration and on the ways that local economic conditions affect both individual decisions and community outcomes.

Karen Witten is an associate professor at the Centre for Social and Health Outcomes Research and Evaluation, Massey University. Her research interests centre on interactions between the physical and spatial characteristics of neighbourhoods and the social relationships, transport choices and well being of the people living in them.